THE following Report has been printed to furnish for our triennial gathering this summer a more convenient and permanent record of interesting events in our lives since graduation than could be found in the Class Book or in my book of Class Memoranda. It will also be useful, if interleaved, for preserving such information about classmates as each one may collect, and will serve as the foundation of another report, some years hence, as much more elaborate as the Class may desire. The sketches of early life have been mainly drawn from the Class Book. Though it has not been usual to insert them in such a report, the advice of many classmates has convinced me that they would add very much to its interest. I should have liked to quote characteristic passages from the biographies and to give more details in a less concise form, but the propriety of the one was questionable unless the consent of the writers were obtained, and the other was forbidden by the necessity of condensing as far as possible such material as I had prepared.

A dash indicates the period of graduation or of leaving College. The time of entering, when not specified, is September, 1854. Teachers, mentioned in connection with the same school, are in all cases successive principals, except when their names are preceded by the abbreviation "Messrs."

Many errors and omissions will probably be noticed by classmates, which must be excused by the difficulty of getting information in some cases. I desire to be informed immediately of any mistakes, so that I can give these corrections to the Class at our meeting on Commencement.

The names of those who belonged to the Class, but did not graduate, are given at the end, and such facts as I happen to have collected. I did not think to add them, till it was too late to obtain further information, so that little but the names could be recorded; but it seemed to me that the mere list would be useful as a nucleus for memoranda. Justice will be done, it is hoped, in a future report.

Will classmates have the consideration to remember the Secretary early, hereafter, whenever they make any important changes in their lives? I have often received letters containing inquiries that I have been unable to answer for want of information. The Secretary of Fifty-Six, in a similar report, suggests that each classmate write him regularly once a year, as at New Year's, "if only to confirm the last accounts." Perhaps some such arrangement may be made at our next meeting.

CHARLES A. ALLEN.

NOTE. The Triennial Class Dinner will take place on Tuesday Evening, July 16th, at 6 o'clock, at the Parker House, Boston.

T. Munroe and Mr. Moses Burbank; taught winter schools in Marlboro' and Bolton before entering College. 1st term Junior, taught High School in Shirley; summer of 1855, absent from College, and during most of Senior year living at home. He took rank in the first half of the Class, while able to attend regularly, but on the printed rank lists of the Junior and Senior years, his long sickness was not mentioned in excuse of his low position, as was done in the case of three others.—After graduation, at home in Bolton. Died at his father's house, of pulmonary consumption, May 20, 1860.

"Amory P. Sawyer was the second child and oldest son of Nathan and Lucinda (Pollard) Sawyer. Descended of healthy and vigorous stock on both father's and mother's side, he started with as fair a prospect of protracted life as usually falls to any one's lot in this part of the world. The first dangers which beset infancy over, he proved to have a well built, muscular frame, strength, if anything, above rather than below the average, and a facility in the performance of manly sports and exercises which distinguished him through life. He was a beautiful skater, an expert swimmer, an easy and graceful rider on horseback, excellent help on a farm, and afterwards, during college life, in boating times, a first rate oarsman. And yet, withal, there was a certain delicacy of constitution which would, from time to time, betray itself, not in chronic invalidism, but in a proneness to yield readily to any morbific influence to which he might be exposed. From the earliest manifestations, he was characterized by sweetness, amiability, and purity of character, and by his retiring modesty and bashfulness. Indeed, few young men—it is believed—have had more to struggle with in the way of extreme bashfulness,—so great, at times, as to take away nearly all power of utterance, and subject him to much mortification from his inability to master his embarrassment. From this cause, he was never able to do himself that justice, and to make that impression on others, especially strangers, to which he was fairly entitled.

As a scholar in the village schools, he was a general favorite with teachers and companions. Seldom, if ever, an unfaithful pupil; seldom, or never, a selfish, rude, ungenerous playmate; prompt and faithful in the school lessons, doing particularly well in the mathematical exercise; an active, joyous, hearty boy on the playground. Ordinarily quiet and reserved, whenever he did let himself out, it was always in a warm, genial, cheerful aspect, in a way betokening a manly and lovable character. Some may have supposed him wanting in force; and in that sort of force which exhibits itself in easy assurance and persistent self-assertion, he certainly was deficient. But if energy may be shown in steadfast adherence to principle, in fixedness of purpose, and unflinching fortitude in the midst of inevitable ills, our friend should be rated high as an energetic man. In the sense indicated, a more forceful man is seldom found.

For the first two years of his college life he prosecuted study with good success. Joining one of the boat clubs, he entered into the new recreation with the ardor belonging to him, and became a superior oarsman, so that, at one of the proposed regattas, he was to have been one of the picked crew of his boat, an appointment, however, which, on account of illness, he could not fulfil. In this way, doubtless, from imprudent exposures, and carelessness after violent exercise, health was insidiously undermined, and the foundation laid of the disease destined to end his life. A cough alarming to those about him began to be heard; loss of strength followed, and all the symptoms by which the fatal malady usually approaches—understood somewhat by others—little recognized by himself. Study now was often interrupted, and was prosecuted with constantly increasing discomfort. In the June of 1857, he was too ill to remain at college, and returned home. Feeling somewhat better as the hot weather mitigated, on the commencement of a new term, the first in the Senior year, he went back to Cambridge; but his room-mate speedily saw that it would be impossible for him to remain, and, accordingly, in about a month's time, he returned home again. After this, he came no more to Cambridge, except to join in the festivities of Class Day, and to take his degree at Commencement. A fishing voyage, on which he went meantime, was of no benefit; nor a horse-back ride, undertaken after graduation, among the mountains of New Hampshire and Vermont. With the usual flattering intervals, when hope revived, little by little strength ebbed away, flesh wasted from his frame, and the "inevitable hour" drew on. All delusion respecting the nature of his disease—with those about him, at least—was long since at an end; but his wonted cheerfulness, fortitude and desire worthily to fill his short allotted time, did not desert him. Twice receiving from his fellow townsmen an appointment on the School Committee, he accepted the trust, and, when strength permitted, performed the duties—always faithfully and well, for he was himself a teacher of considerable experience, and would do nothing slightly if he could help it.

As the spring of 1860 advanced, it became apparent that the time of his departure was close at hand, and on the 29th of May, during the night, he breathed his last, dying—to use his mother's statement—"in perfect peace." During the day preceding, his eye had kindled with evident pleasure on friends approaching his bedside, he had given each of them a warm pressure of the hand, and addressed to them some affectionate and appropriate word. His former room-mate all through college, and the cherished companion of many years, was with him at the last, and was happy in the thought that he could in some measure minister to the mitigation of his distress. Blessed with one of the tenderest and most assiduous of mothers; watched over by a fond father, sister and brother, and other deeply sympathizing friends; himself never once forgetting his wonted courtesy, or becoming petulant or exacting, but calm, serene, trusting in the good God and the written promise, his sick-room was the scene of much elevating influence, and his last hours as full of comforting religious hope and assurance as could well be. Truly his was a lovely character, and other homes than his own felt as if they had lost a son when he was gone.

The funeral was on the 22nd. A large gathering was present, among whom were Messrs. C. A. Allen, Edes, and Kilbourn of the Class. Rev. Thomas T. Stone, pastor of the Bolton church, conducted the services; two appropriate hymns were sung by a choir composed mostly of the school companions of earlier days, and the body was deposited in the tomb of his father, in the Bolton East Burying Ground."
